6. Duties of the internal committee and modus operandi of filing complaints –

a. To ensure a safe and secure environment for raising concerns, the organization has created a dedicated email ID: posh@vishakha.com
An aggrieved employee may submit a complaint in writing—either through email or a physical letter—to any member of the Committee within 3 months from the date of the incident. In exceptional circumstances, the Committee may extend this timeline by an additional period not exceeding 3 months, with the reasons for such extension duly recorded.

b. If aggrieved individual finds it difficult to make the complaint in writing, the individual may seek help from the committee members to prepare a written complaint.

c. If the aggrieved employee is unable to file a complaint due to physical or mental incapacity or in the event of their death, the legal heir may submit the complaint on their behalf.

d. Before initiating an inquiry, the internal committee may take steps to settle the matter between complainant and the respondent through conciliation at the request of aggrieved. But, in no case monetary settlement will be made as basis of conciliation. If an amicable settlement is worked out, the committee will record the settlement so arrived and will provide copies to aggrieved individual and also to HR. However, the committee may conduct inquiry in the same matter on receipt of information from aggrieved individual about non-compliance of any term or condition of the settlement by the respondent.

e. The inquiry so initiated, should be concluded within a period not exceeding 3 months. During the pendency of such inquiry the Committee may take appropriate decision in consultation with the HR to protect aggrieved individual from the influence/contact of respondent at workplace.

f. After completing the inquiry, the committee will share its findings with HR and the concerned individuals within 10 days, along with its recommendations. These recommendations may include either clearing the respondent of the allegations or taking action for misconduct as per the applicable service rules and in accordance with the provision of the law.

g. On receipt of recommendations from the Committee, the HR will review it and take necessary action for implementation within a period of 60 days.

h. Consequences for False complaint – If, after investigation, the committee concludes that a complaint is malicious, knowingly false, or supported by forged or misleading documents, it may recommend appropriate action against the concerned individual or any false witness, in line with applicable service rules.

   Note: This does not apply to complaints that remain unproven but were made in good faith.

i. The committee will meet once every quarter and will prepare an annual report in the first week of January. The report will include details of activities carried out during the year, complaints received, inquiries conducted, and cases resolved. The committee will then submit this report to HR.
